Western Specialty Contractors Condenses 100+ Years of Building Inspection Expertise in Inaugural Digital Newsletter

(St. Louis, MO, April 30, 2019) Building construction and maintenance has changed a lot since Western Specialty Contractors was founded in 1915. Western has been right there in the trenches the entire time, providing trusted advice about building envelope restoration and maintenance to thousands of people across the country.

And even though much has changed, says Western Specialty Contractors COO Tom Brooks, building owners and property managers may be surprised by how much has actually remained the same.

“Fads come and go. Tactics change. New contractors enter the industry, then fade away. But there are a few fundamental mindsets, strategies and tools that we’ve seen work throughout our entire 100+ year history,” said Brooks. “One of those tools is the building inspection.”

Western Specialty Contractors is sharing its expertise and a century’s worth of restoration and preservation experience with building owners and property managers across the country through its inaugural digital newsletter dedicated to taking the guesswork out of in-house inspections.

“The solutions we develop for our customers and their properties have been tested and implemented on thousands of buildings all across the country. With this foundational expertise, Western knows what it takes to conduct effective in-house building inspections as well as anyone,” said Brooks. “We know which parts of the building you need to check and the small warning signs that you can’t afford to miss.”

Western has put all its building inspection knowledge in one place. Topics discussed in the inaugural newsletter include:

- The fastest way to make your building maintenance program more effective
- Why building inspections are so critical to your success
- A handy 3-step process for organizing the information on your property
- How to save time and money by planning your inspection
- And a whole lot more...

“We cover the fundamentals of doing an annual building inspection that will put you miles ahead of the rest of the industry. There might not be a more important topic when it comes to helping you create a winning difference as a property management professional,” said Brooks.
